GLOBAL MIGRATION TRENDS

International migration touches on a multiplicity of economic, social and security aspects affecting our daily lives in an increasingly interconnected world. Migration is a term that encompasses a wide variety of movements and situations that involve people of all walks of life and backgrounds. More than ever before, migration touches all states and people in an era of deepening globalization. Migration is intertwined with geopolitics, trade and cultural exchange, and provides opportunities for states, businesses and communities to benefit enormously. Migration has helped improve people's lives in both origin and destination countries and has offered opportunities for millions of people worldwide to forge safe and meaningful lives abroad.

According to the UN, the estimated number of international migrants worldwide increased over seventeen years between 2000 -2017, reaching 258 million in 2017. This figure is up from 248 million in 2015, 220 million in 2010, 191 million in 2005 and 173 million in 2000 (United Nations Department for Economic and Social Affairs (UN DESA), 2017). During the period of 2000-2017, the international migrant stock grew by an average of 2.3 per cent. People are migrating more towards high Income countries. Work is the major reason that people migrate internationally, and migrant workers constitute a large majority of the world's international migrants, with most living in high-income countries and many engaged in the service sector.
